Court Awards Strategies Committee

A joint committee of the Texas Access to Justice Commission and the Texas Access to Justice Foundation

By Tom Godbold, Chair

When the Texas Access to Justice Foundation and Texas Access to Justice Commission created the Court Awards Strategies Committee (“Committee”), we were just beginning to see the devastating effects of low interest rates on funding for civil legal aid in Texas. The Interest on Lawyers’ Trust Accounts (“IOLTA”) program, a primary funding source for legal services administered by the Texas Access to Justice Foundation, has seen a drastic decline in IOLTA revenue as the need for civil legal services continue to rise for poor and low-income Texans. These are people for whom basic civil legal services can serve as a life-line during these economic times – helping a worker receive just wages, protection from losing one’s home, or securing benefits for persons with disabilities or our veterans.

Our Committee began looking at ways to compensate for this crisis in legal aid funding by exploring options for court awards – like cy pres awards – to generate desperately needed resources for our state’s most vulnerable. During the last two years, our Committee studied court award models in other states, examined legal precedence for court awards for legal aid, and continues to work to educate judges and lawyers about the positive impact court awards can have on funding for civil legal services.

This toolkit is designed for lawyers, judges and others involved in our legal system who are interested in employing various court award strategies to support civil legal aid in Texas. We hope that it provides you with the basic information you need to help make an impact on access to justice in Texas as you consider the Texas Access to Justice Foundation and its nearly 40 grantees as recipients of court awards. Thank you.

Free legal aid in civil matters in Texas is a necessity in critical areas such as housing, family, consumer and individual rights. Such services are a good investment because they help to stabilize struggling families and secure public benefits and thus help avoid the costs of homelessness, hunger, health care, and foster care. In 2007, the Legal Services Corporation (LSC) completed a national comprehensive study of the civil legal needs of low-income Americans and issued a report, “Documenting the Justice Gap in America: The Current Unmet Civil Legal Needs of Low-Income Americans”. The study found that the vast majority of the needs of low-income Americans for civil legal assistance are not being met. Texas LSC programs cannot provide services to at least two out of four low-income residents in dire need of civil legal assistance.

Texas is fortunate to have many legal aid and pro bono programs with full-time staff and volunteer attorneys, as well as various other public interest programs that leverage the talent and generosity of the private bar. Such programs provide critical services that benefit poor individuals and nonprofit organizations serving local communities. However, there is a profound justice gap. The major problems that impact access to the justice system in Texas are limited resources, restrictions on uses of funding, scarcity of legal services in rural areas of the state, and a rapidly increasing poverty population. Texas experienced a 27 percent increase in its poverty population from 2000 to 2007 which does not include those Texans who have fallen into poverty due to the severe economic downturn in 2008.

The primary funding streams for civil legal aid in Texas do not come close to meeting the need. Due to inadequate funding, the civil legal services programs in Texas are required to perform legal triage. They help those in the most dire circumstances first and do what they can to provide brief services to others. Unfortunately, only a small fraction of those seeking help can be provided with full representation.

Cy Pres

In a 2004 report, “A Framework for Resource Development,” presented to the Texas Access to Justice Commission and the State Bar of Texas, cy pres awards was cited as a potential revenue source for civil legal services in Texas. The report noted that unclaimed class action proceeds were sometimes devoted to civil legal services to the poor. The report stated:

“..in several states and communities, legal services programs have developed effective strategic approaches to securing cy pres awards for legal aid. States like Illinois, Washington, Maryland and Minnesota have achieved impressive results. Texas should follow their example and institute a plan.”

When class action lawsuits result in an award for the plaintiffs, in almost every case, there are funds that go unclaimed by the class. These funds are often not distributed as additional funds to the members of the class who filed claims. Instead, they become a residual fund that is available for another use. Broadly speaking, cy pres is the term for finding another appropriate use for the funds. The decision as to such use is usually jointly arrived at by counsel and the court, most typically in the context of a settlement agreement. Cy pres awards are an ideal way to advance the goal of ensuring equal access to justice.

Court Awards Strategies Committee

The Texas Access to Justice Commission and the Texas Access to Justice Foundation took up the cy pres challenge presented by the Report when it created a joint Court Awards Strategies Committee in 2008 to explore cy pres and other innovative ways of securing additional funding streams for civil legal services. The Court Awards Strategies Committee, chaired by Houston attorney Tom Godbold, set the goal of reaching out, educating and informing a variety of groups - bar associations, mediators, members of the judiciary, groups of trial lawyers, etc. about cy pres and its' use for funding civil legal aid.

This toolkit is for the profession and others interested in securing cooperation and collaboration with members of the bar and Texas courts and employing various court awards such as cy pres awards as a key method of supporting civil legal aid in Texas. In particular, one popular and more commonly utilized strategy is cy pres awards. This is because of the recent legal trend as to both the doctrine of cy pres and the courts' broad equitable powers to allow flexibility in the distribution of class action residual funds, and permit the use of funds for broad public interest purposes by educational, charitable, and other public service organizations.

Access to Justice in Texas Facts

To be eligible for legal aid, an individual must earn no more than $13,538 a year; a family of four, $27,563.

There are 5.3 million Texans who qualify for legal aid.

There is one legal aid lawyer for every 11,512 Texans who qualify for legal aid.

The denial of equal justice for the poor who cannot afford attorneys in basic civil legal matters has an adverse impact on low-income individuals, families, and society as a whole. It works to erode public trust and confidence in our system of justice. The judicial branch, in our constitutional structure, shoulders primary leadership responsibility to preserve and protect equal justice and take action necessary to ensure access to the justice system for those who face impediments they are unable to surmount on their own. The Supreme Court of Texas has provided leadership in improving the administration of justice by creating the Texas Access to Justice Foundation and the Texas Access to Justice Commission, by encouraging pro bono legal services in civil matters, supporting the Interest on Lawyers' Trust Accounts (IOLTA) Program, and supporting the continued funding of the Legal Services Corporation.

The Texas Supreme Court leadership has been critical and has been setting the tone and creating a climate of support for equal access to justice in Texas. In states across the country where the courts have taken on this leadership role, the bar, policy-makers and others have followed. The Court has the capacity to set the context within attorneys, law firms, the courts and others will act and react to opportunities to creatively expand access to the justice system.

*“Legal aid is the safety net that keeps these fellow Texans from going over the edge; without it, they might never recover, even when the economy improves. We cannot afford to let this safety net unravel. Solving the critical legal needs that thousands of poor Texans face will help them remain productive and inevitably hasten our state's recovery.
— Former Justice Harriet O’Neill,
Supreme Court of Texas*

Judicial leadership and commitment are essential to ensuring equal access to the justice system and to the achievement through statewide effort of equal justice for all. The courts can remove impediments to access to the justice system, including physical, economic, psychological and language barriers: be part of strategies in establishing or increasing public funding and support for civil legal services for individuals and families who have no meaningful access to the justice system; and expand assistance available to self-represented litigants.

The unavailability of civil equal justice services for vulnerable and low-income people severely limits the administration of justice in Texas, and the courts’ commitment to exercise leadership to expand public and private funding is crucial.

Texas Strategic Plan

The Texas strategic plan for increasing resources for legal aid calls for leadership roles for the Texas courts. While much time is spent addressing immediate funding needs, the efforts can obscure the necessity to develop plans that will lead to long-term, stable and enduring infrastructures of financial support. If court award strategies are implemented in Texas, they will have a substantial effect on the capacity of legal aid programs to maintain and perhaps increase their current levels of funding and services. An important goal for Texas is to have the idea of financially supporting legal aid become an accepted cultural value within the legal and judicial community.

Court awards strategies should be pursued, not just for the funds needed to support the existing infrastructure for the delivery of civil legal aid to the poor in Texas, but also to:

- help strengthen ties to the bar and judiciary
- open up avenues of communication with new and existing supporters
- stimulate creative thinking on the part of attorneys and judges
- promote greater awareness of clients and their issues

Sources of Court Awards

There are multiple sources of potential funds from court awards strategies, including:

- Cy Pres Awards
- Negotiated Settlements
- Criminal Restitution
- Sanction Awards
- Seizure
- Mediation, Arbitration and Settlement Agreements

Texas Access to Justice Foundation

A Deserving Beneficiary of Court Award Funds

The Texas Access to Justice Foundation (TAJF) created by the Supreme Court of Texas in 1984, is the primary state-based funding source for the provision of civil legal aid in Texas. The Foundation administers a variety of funding sources, which are earmarked to assist nonprofit organizations in providing legal aid to approximately 100,000 Texas families each year. TAJF has administered the interest on lawyers' trust accounts (IOLTA) program for more than 25 years. IOLTA funds are the primary state funding source for civil legal aid to the poor in Texas. Nearly 40 Texas nonprofits rely upon IOLTA funding to support civil legal aid in order to assist low-income families meet very basic legal needs involving: shelter, safety and utilities.

- The Foundation has a proven track record of awarding and administering grants for more than 25 years.
- The Foundation is considered a leader in the national IOLTA foundation community, has an impeccable reputation among the Texas legal community, including state, local and minority bar associations and other social, human service and faith based providers and is considered the primary underpinning for the delivery of civil legal aid to the poor in Texas.
- The Foundation has awarded and administered over $280 million to Texas nonprofit organizations and been entrusted to administer a wide variety of funds by the Supreme Court of Texas, Office of Attorney General, Texas Legislature, the State Bar of Texas, the Texas Access to Justice Commission and private and corporate donors.
- The Foundation has extensive experience in screening and awarding grants to deserving nonprofits based upon selective grant criteria, research and assessment and strong board involvement and leadership.
- The Foundation provides ongoing compliance and monitoring reviews to ensure adherence to grant requirement and agreements and to ensure fiscal oversight and programmatic accountability and transparency.

The Texas Access to Justice Foundation supports nearly 40 independent nonprofit legal aid providers throughout the state. Their clients include victims of domestic violence, homeless families, persons denied access to necessary health care services, victims of discrimination, children in need of special education, families and individuals who are targets of consumer fraud, and the elderly. Funding Legal Aid in Texas with Court Award Funds

Courts have found legal aid programs to be appropriate recipients of cy pres funds for two basic reasons:

- Legal aid programs commonly represent the next best use of unclaimed funds to indirectly benefit the members of a class under the cy pres doctrine.
- The underlying mission of legal aid programs for the poor is consistent with the purpose of class action lawsuits and Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Rule 23 recognizes the need to protect the legal rights of those who, because of their economic position, would otherwise be unrepresented.

Nexus

A key issue with regard to seeking and obtaining cy pres awards is the need for a well-defined connection or “nexus” between the underlying litigation and the recipient and use of a cy pres award. An easy example of a nexus would be litigation over health insurance premiums in which cy pres funds were used to fund a legal aid position to do health care access advocacy for low-income clients.

Broader arguments showing connections or nexus can be made regarding the concept of access to justice as well as in terms of specific populations served or particular subject areas addressed.

Access to Justice

Access to the judicial system is subsidized by our society in the belief that it is essential that persons have access to a peaceful method of resolving disputes. However, thousands of Texans are denied effective access to civil justice because they are unable to obtain legal counsel. Therefore, it is appropriate for funds created through the use of the tax-subsidized judicial system to be distributed in part for the purpose of providing access to that system by indigent Texans.

Special Populations

Legal aid programs have special projects serving many identifiable populations including: persons over 60 years of age, children, abuse victims, persons with disabilities, public assistance recipients, veterans, migrant workers, immigrants and refugees, low-wage workers, children with special educational needs, and low-income persons in general.

Scope of Substantive Services

Legal aid programs provide a broad range of services.

Legal Aid Addresses Societal Problems

Geographic Scope

There are a number of ways to use cy pres funds so as to have regional or statewide impact if that is deemed appropriate. The Foundation awards and administers grants designated for specific legal aid programs in regions throughout the state. Each pin represents a Foundation grantee. The geographic scope of a cy pres award could be limited or expanded geographically in almost any way deemed appropriate by a court.

Every population group and geographic region is touched by the services of legal aid providers and any cy pres award can be structured to impact the desired group or locale.

Examples of Cy Pres Awards

- In Texas a cy pres award was used to fund a major initiative aimed at increasing legal resources available online at www.TexasLawHelp.org. Practice Points & Tips How to Structure Cy Pres Relief in Class Action Settlements

Raising the issue of a cy pres provision relatively early in settlement negotiations can have a positive impact on the process. Some defendants may find the prospect of paying money to settle a case more palatable when they consider that some of the money will benefit a good cause. Counsel should always consider whether there are funds that can be made available for cy pres. As a general rule, counsel should resist efforts to allow reverter of unclaimed funds to defendants and should instead strongly advocate for cy pres awards for legal aid to the poor.

The decision to make a cy pres award in a class action settlement most often happens during the settlement process. Class action settlements must be approved by the court and must afford absent class members the opportunity to opt out or object. Therefore, while a cy pres remedy can be structured however the parties wish, it must pass muster with the court and the class members. Even where settlement funds are to be distributed to identifiable plaintiffs, cy pres may still be used by negotiating, from the start, to set aside a fixed percentage of the settlement fund or a certain amount. The most common use of cy pres is the case where a settlement provides that unclaimed or leftover funds will be used for the cy pres award. Once plaintiffs and defendants agree that a cy pres award is desirable and appropriate, the key is to fashion a remedy that will satisfy the court and the absent class members. It is also important to study the relevant provisions of the Texas Property Code that deal with unclaimed property to ensure compliance with state law.

Often the driving force for cy pres awards to legal aid programs is the plaintiffs' counsel, but defense counsel frequently welcome a cy pres remedy as a way for their client(s) to resolve a case and obtain some positive publicity from the settlement.

Questions to Consider

After agreeing on the terms of a cy pres award in a class action, the parties must obtain the approval of the court. A motion to approve a settlement that includes a cy pres award should include information responsive to the following questions:

- What makes a cy pres award appropriate in this case?
- How does the cy pres award further the interest of the class in this case?
- How much will remain for cy pres after distribution to the class?
- How much will be set aside for cy pres out of settlement funds?
- Who are the potential awardees of a cy pres award in this case?
- How will a cy pres award further the mission, purposes, and goals of the proposed awardees?
- How will the awardees of a cy pres grant be chosen - will they be chosen by the parties, the court or an independent party?
- What are the procedures for potential recipients to request proposals for cy pres awards - what are the criteria for selection, and what is the process for judicial approval of the selection?
- Are there any conflicts of interest between or among the parties, counsel, and potential awardees?
- Will there be post-settlement reporting requirements and oversight of the awardees?
